Transformer inference can use grouped query attention. This architecture shares key and value heads across query heads, reducing the KV cache memory required for long context generation.